IIA in-house training and qualifications

Our in-house training service offers all of the benefits of external training, tailored to your specific needs.

1. What you will get with in-house training and qualifications

▲ First class training

All trainers are highly skilled in their areas of expertise and have a wealth of personal knowledge and experience. Many combine training delivery with hands on experience in internal audit and risk management.

▲ Cost effective

Since the training takes place at your own premises, there is no travel, no time away from the workplace and no expenses often associated with public courses. Fees are charged per day rather than per delegate, therefore staff can be trained at a very low cost per person enabling you to maximise your budget.

▲ Flexible

All the courses from our public training programme and both of our IIA qualifications can be offered on an in-house basis. Should you require something more tailored to your exact training requirements we can also develop a course to suit your specific needs.

▲ Immediate impact

By learning in familiar surroundings and having colleagues learning together, learning can be put into practice straight away. Sensitive company information can be shared and used as real life examples during the course in complete confidence to enable you to relate your learning directly back to your working environment.

2. In-house training – delivering in a way that suits you

At the IIA, we recognise that every organisation is unique so a standard approach doesn't always work. As a result, our in-house training service provides you with a flexible and cost effective approach to learning where we bring the experts to you.

There are a host of IIA training and courses that you can opt to be delivered in-house, including the ever-popular (and ever-relevant) IIA Certificate in Internal Audit and Business Risk. You can choose to break down the IIA Certificate into individual training sessions, or complete the entire IIA Certificate programme.

What are the benefits of in-house training?

By choosing to run your training in-house, you can reach a much larger proportion of your internal audit function. This means a reduction in the time spent away from your working day and the ability to comfortably fit training into a busy working week.

With no travel time or expenses, resources are saved, and you can be confident that all your staff are receiving the same training - to an extremely high standard - on materials that you are happy with. The course pace can be amended to suit all delegates and the development of materials can be tailored to ensure it is specific to your business sector.

By running bespoke training courses in-house, you are given the opportunity to introduce relevant case studies and sensitive marketing competitive information without fear of being compromised.

“Using IIA Learning’s distance learning model means that there is no need for staff to travel and that the training can be tailored to meet our needs and requirements.

But probably the most important benefit is that everyone involved in the training feels at ease - they are training with colleagues so therefore we bypass the whole getting-to-know-you stage and get straight to the important part – the learning.”

3. In-house learning

The IIA offers two uniquely designed IIA professional qualifications: IIA Diploma in Internal Audit Practice (IIA Diploma) and IIA Advanced Diploma in Internal Auditing and Management (IIA Advanced Diploma). IIA Learning offers a flexible learning programme supported by revision workshops and study sessions. These workshops and study session are available on an in-house basis designed to meet the specific needs of students.

You will be assigned one of our tutors who will work with your students throughout the entire study programme, to ensure consistency and clear communication. All our tutors are experts in their fields, combining training delivery experience and hands-on professional experience in internal audit and risk management.

The IIA will liaise with you directly to create and develop a study programme tailored to meet your needs. Each in-house study programme is different, as each organisation and their requirements vary. We will ensure that we are providing the support and resources you expect and require.

After participating in a study session, support is also provided should students have any queries or need any additional information.

What are the benefits of in-house learning?

Since the face-to-face elements of the programme take place at your own premises, there is no unnecessary travel, no time away from the office, and no unrelated expenses often associated with the public programmes. It is an efficient use of your corporate training budget and can be coordinated in and around busy work diaries more efficiently.

With the training being delivered on your doorstep, we are able to provide equal support and information to all students taking an IIA qualification across the board.

By studying in familiar surroundings and with colleagues, learning is more effective. Not only will students feel comfortable and able to question and introduce topics for debate, but sensitive company information can be shared and used as concrete examples during the programme in complete confidence.
